

Doctor of Philosophy: Organizational Leadership

Individualized and low-residency doctoral program (60 credit hours beyond the Master's)

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Advanced study in Organizational Leadership at Shenandoah University is offered through a low-residency/hybrid, student-centered, inquiry-driven, problem-oriented program that explores challenges of leadership and allows you to build the skills to move organizations forward.

The PhD is built on an interdisciplinary leadership and research core, designed to appeal to professionals in institutions of public trust such as service-oriented or community-based nonprofits, public and private sector organizations, and higher education professionals. The flexibility in design across all coursework allows for optimal learning in one's specific area of interest.

This program integrates theory with real-world problems and learner's lived experience. In six core courses guided by competency-based outcomes, learners develop individualized programs of study addressing each set of course outcomes. The individualized focus carries through in the program a concentration and a capstone product.

ADMISSIONS REQUIREMENTS

- Graduate Application for Admission and $30 application fee
- Master's Degree (minimum 3.5 GPA)

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

- What are the on-campus requirements for this low-residency program?
Students study on campus two weekends each semester and for one week in each of the two required summer residencies. The summer residency courses are offered in a seminar format. Program participants, learners, and faculty take leadership roles in directing and leading inquiry in a seminar. Outside of these visits, courses are highly individualized and allow for one-on-one mentorship with program faculty.
- Are visa-seeking students eligible to apply to this program?
For International Students who require an F-1 or I-20 visa, due to lack of available full-time credit hours, F-1 visas are not issued for this program.
